

The Physics Dept instrument package (arrow) being launched last year from Sweden. It went up via balloon to about 40 km, collected ionized particle data for several days, and came down by parachute in northern Canada. It is planned to launch again in a year, from Antarctica, at higher latitude for longer stay. Keeping instruments at moderate temperature is a challenge.

